Flourishing Firm Exemplifies Edmonton's Industrial Growth

Gainer's Packing Plant Pays Quarter Million Dollars in Wages Every Year

Began As One-Man Shop and Got a Real Start in Kootenay Rush

Plant Is Modern Marvel of Sanitation and Wholesomeness

ATED by a single man, in 1891 John Gainer established himself on the south side. Today, as a result of his initiative, Gainers Limited employs 150 persons. Each year over $250,000 is paid out in wages to Edmonton people and instead of marketing meat products in pound orders over a counter this modern plant has a yearly output of 4,000 tons of dressed meats.

Mr. John Gainer is still a daily visitor at the factory but nowadays instead of seeing south side products being purchased directly by south side people he witnesses the "Superior" brand on packages designed for Japan, the United States, France, to as far north as the Arctic coast and aints all over the three western provinces.

Transition Gradual
The transition of the Gainers factory from a small butcher shop to a modern packing plant was gradual. With Edmonton's growth farmers in the vicinity of the city commenced to raise more live stock; they were sold to the originator of the south side industry, and presently Mr. Gainer commenced shipping.

At about the time of the Kootenay rush in 1901 a sudden demand was created for bacon, hams, dressed beef, and so on. This resulted in the establishment of the first curing plant, and from that day it has grown until now it occupies an area of ten acres.

Each season the industry slaughters 5,000 cattle, 3,000 sheep, 40,000 hogs and 4,000 calves; it uses $5,000 worth of made-in-Edmonton boxes, and utilizes 500 tons of salt for curing purposes.

"Just as soon as the Fort McMurray salt is obtainable in quantities we hope to use a large quantity of this product," said Arthur Gainer, to the Bulletin. "We have tried it out and we believe in supporting home industries as far as possible."

Use Local Products
Other locally produced articles which Gainers Limited use in their year's operation are 2,500 tons of Edmonton coal, 500 tons of hay and greenfeed, 200 tons of barley and oats, while the firm specializes in having its advertising designed created in Edmonton in preference to placing these orders in Eastern Canada.

Many other things are used of course; a large warehouse is packed to the roof with various wrapping papers, many carloads of wood are used in smoking hams and loaves and there are carloads and other forms of containers.

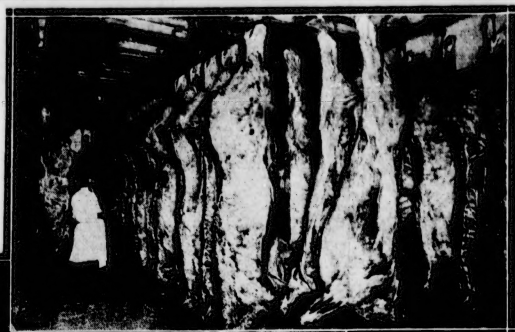

An interesting sidelight is the rapidly developing trade with the Far East. Gainer's hams and loaves are used aboard the battleships of Japan, much frozen meat is also used by the residents of the Land of the Cherry Blossom and China is cultivating an appetite for ham and eggs.

Service Stressed.
"Personal service is the thing we stress in this plant more than anything else," said A. M. McDonald, the sales manager, as a tour of the factory was commenced. "This means a whole lot to us and the people we serve. If anything goes wrong we trace it down to the point of origin right away—with the consequence that it is very seldom that we have any complaints."

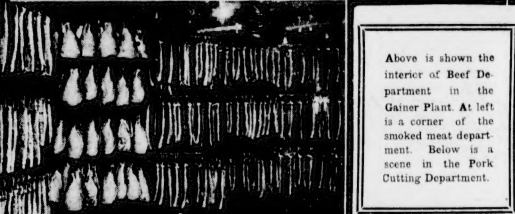

The factory is situated on the brink of the valley through which the creek trickles, the C.N.R. line which follows the creek being secured by the whitewashed railings. From this point the animals travel onwards and upwards until they finally emerge in various food products as a later date.

The First Phase
Naturally the first phase in the slaughter, where the animals are dispatched humanely, and where a long voyage across the North Pacific after the hogs had had their short lives ended they are slaughtered, and passed through a newly devised dehairing machine. This removes all the animal's hair and shaves them through at the rate of 150 an hour. Then via the trolley the skin comes pass in the chilling room where by the use of a modern brine spray the meat is rendered firm and cold without being frozen. This is the newest and most efficient method.

stainer company guides itself upon it is better-rendered, this means that the pork fat from which the lard comes is in contact with no foreign substance, few strains passing outside the jacket, reduce the fat to a suitable material. Upon the rendering room it is placed in the packing room where white and gilt by the quick, exact, at a vital point upon the packing line, and outside and the fatline yellow line. The lard is unscented by hand from the time it is taken from the animal until the time it is placed in the white boxes and routed out to their worthy destination.

A special department takes care of the butter, buttering and roasting of hams, shoulder paper and a waxed finish outer cover ensuring that the various goods are kept in perfect condition.

Huge Inventory
The substantial Gainer Limited would appear to possess a food reserve supply sufficient for all eventualities. In the cool storage rooms are to be seen more varieties of meat foods and in greater quantities than the average thought existed. Stocks of natural hogbacks, others of smaller size and flavored with garlic for the satisfaction of those fresh from Europe, fresh and smoked sausages, head cheese, bologna, salami, corned beef, great white dripping cokes and loaded racks of delicately browned luncheon hams.

Second only in interest are the huge casks where down in the bowels of the earth are some of the great variety in which the various meats are packed and come prominently to various other transactions on the home side. One of the most interesting hams also touching this concrete floor is the large barrel filled with salt and getting a "heavy cure" preparation for the long voyage down the northern rivers to the Arctic.

The Engine Room
In the engine room, two large steam engines pump the ammonia which provides the chilly atmosphere desired in the various departments but outside the window all the various machines are powered by city electricity and gasolene. There is no loss of it. In addition to the engines the firm has machinery to ensure that the machinery functions smoothly while a sewage machine pump and other adjuncts are also installed.

For deliveries 8 trucks and 1 train are used and there are last on the go because Gainers manufacture practically all their own equipment. John Gainer, founder of the business, is still president. Arthur Gainer, the managing director, is Clifford Gainer, vice president, with A. M. McDonald, sales manager, and J. P. Harty, plant superintendent.
